An estimated 1 million new cases of atrial fibrillation occur every year in the United States, and patients with nonvalvular atrial fibrillation have a 50-fold increased risk of ischemic stroke. Trials have established the effectiveness of magnesium sulfate in reducing the risk of ischemic stroke in patients with acute cerebral ischemia. To assess the effectiveness of magnesium sulfate in preventing ischemic stroke in patients with nonvalvular atrial fibrillation. Our search included MEDLINE, EMBASE, PsycINFO, and The Cochrane Central Register of Controlled Trials for randomized trials and prospective and retrospective cohort studies, using the following MeSH terms: magnesium sulfate, ionized magnesium, magnesium, atrial fibrillation, ischemic stroke. Date of the last search was April 2010. Three small randomized trials with a total of 383 participants met our inclusion criteria. These studies used different protocols for administration of magnesium sulfate. None of the 3 studies detected a difference between magnesium sulfate and control groups in the risk of symptomatic ischemic stroke. Four cohort studies with a total of 1757 participants also did not detect a difference. The absolute risk reduction in symptomatic ischemic stroke in magnesium-treated patients was 2.9% (95% confidence interval [CI
